Over 4 generations of mothers and daughters from one family, 'Amor meva' relates the story of brave, liberal women with Jewish roots over the course of the 20th century. From great-grandmother Rut to young Debora, via Regina and Pat, for an entire century the women from the Valleriola have fought a brave and determined struggle to make a place for themselves in the world. The ideological disagreements of the times and the age into which they were born have always marked them, and in order to keep their own identity and live freely, they have often had to rebel and hide their feelings, origins, and even their true sexuality.

A courageous, sincere novel that, through the mother-daughter relationship, explores the limits of identity and reveals many secrets that hide within families.
